

This Guidance Note is designed to help you understand the concept of authorised share capital and specifically in relation to the authorised share capital, how it can be removed and how shares are transferred within a private company.

Authorised Share Capital

The concept of companies having an authorised share capital was abolished under the 2006 Companies Act. This means that there is no longer a limit on the number of shares that a company can issue. This issue depends on whether the company was incorporated before or since the Companies Act 2006. Where a company has a restriction in the articles on alloting shares, it is treated as a restriction that needs to be amended or revoked.

Companies incorporated before 2006

Companies that were incorporated before the Companies Act 2006 was implemented had to state an authorised share capital in their Articles of Association. This means that there was (and unless the restriction is removed) a limit on the maximum amount of shares that can be issued.

This becomes a problem when a company wishes to issue new shares above the maximum prescribed in the Memorandum of Association.

Note that since the implementation of the Companies Act 2006, which came into force on 1st October 2009, any provisions of a company's memorandum of association relating to the authorised share capital are to be treated as provisions of the company's articles of association. This provision will therefore (unless removed) apply to companies incorporated since 2006.

Companies incorporated since 2006

The concept of authorised share capital was abolished by the 2006 Act, so companies incorporated since the relevant date (1st October 2009) will not have an authorised share capital. Such a limit on the share capital was not a requirement of the Articles of Association should be checked to ensure that the number of shares that can be issued is not limited.

How to remove the authorised share capital

The limits imposed by the authorised share capital can be removed by one of two means, both of which require a general meeting of the shareholders.

1. Delete the article(s) that restrict the authorised share capital in relation to the administration of a company. This Guidance note considers removing the authorised share capital, how shares are allotted and how shares are transferred within a private company.

Where a company has an authorised share capital, it is treated as a restriction that needs to be amended or revoked.

Companies incorporated since 2006

Companies that were incorporated before the Companies Act 2006 was implemented had to state an authorised share capital in their Articles of Association. This means that there was (and unless the restriction is removed) a limit on the maximum amount of shares that can be issued.

This becomes a problem when a company wishes to issue new shares above the maximum prescribed in the Memorandum of Association.

Note that since the implementation of the Companies Act 2006, which came into force on 1st October 2009, any provisions of a company's memorandum of association relating to the authorised share capital are to be treated as provisions of the company's articles of association. This provision will therefore (unless removed) apply to companies incorporated since 2006.

Companies incorporated since 2006

The concept of authorised share capital was abolished by the 2006 Act, so companies incorporated since the relevant date (1st October 2009) will not have an authorised share capital. Such a limit on the share capital was not a requirement of the Articles of Association. The Articles of Association should be checked to ensure that the number of shares that can be issued is not limited.

The limits imposed by the authorised share capital can be removed by one of two means, both of which require a general meeting of the shareholders.

1. Delete the article(s) that restrict the authorised share capital

The regulations state that the authorised share capital may be removed by an ordinary resolution (See: Shareholders' Meeting – Ordinary Resolution) (note that normally, a special resolution is required, but in this case an ordinary resolution will suffice).

2. Adopt a completely new set of articles

Entirely new articles of association may be adopted by passing a shareholders' special resolution (See: Shareholders' Meeting – Special Resolution). Although this requires a greater majority (i.e. 75% rather than 50%), the new articles will assist them in complying with the regulations more efficiently.

Obviously, the new Articles to be adopted must not contain anything that can be issued. Neither the new Articles nor the Company Limited by Shares (See: Modified Model Articles for Companies Limited by Shares) can contain an authorised share capital.

Whichever method is used, a copy of the new Articles, along with Companies House (See: Companies House – File New Articles and Resolution), must be filed with Companies House, along with a printed copy of the new Articles. If the amendment is minor, Companies House will accept the new Articles pasted over the top, and then photocopied.

Steps to be taken by the company

1.	Call a board meeting. The directors should then decide whether to simply remove the articles relating to authorised share capital or to adopt entirely new articles. The directors should then call a general meeting of shareholders (See: Board Minutes – Calling a General Meeting ) to circulate a shareholders' resolution.
2.	Send out notice of general meeting (14 days notice required).
3.	Hold the general meeting.
4.	Arrange to have the articles of association removed, or new articles adopted, by passing a shareholders' resolution, along with the resolution, along with the new articles, to Companies House.

the articles of association relating to authorised share capital may be removed by the company by ordinary resolution (See: Shareholders' Meeting – Ordinary Resolution) (note that normally, a special resolution is required, but in this case an ordinary resolution will suffice).

Adoption

Entirely new articles of association may be adopted by passing a shareholders' special resolution (See: Shareholders' Meeting – Special Resolution). Although this requires a greater majority (i.e. 75% rather than 50%), the new articles will assist them in complying with the regulations more efficiently.

Obviously, the new Articles to be adopted must not contain anything that can be issued. Neither the new Articles nor the Company Limited by Shares (See: Modified Model Articles for Companies Limited by Shares) can contain an authorised share capital.

Whichever method is used, a copy of the new Articles, along with Companies House (See: Companies House – File New Articles and Resolution), must be filed with Companies House, along with a printed copy of the new Articles. If the amendment is minor, Companies House will accept the new Articles pasted over the top, and then photocopied.

Decide whether to simply remove the articles relating to authorised share capital or to adopt entirely new articles.

Call a general meeting of shareholders (See: Board Minutes – Calling a General Meeting) to circulate a shareholders' resolution to remove the authorised share capital, or to adopt new articles.

Send out notice of general meeting (14 days notice required).

Hold the general meeting.

Arrange to have the articles of association removed, or new articles adopted, by passing a shareholders' resolution, along with the resolution, along with the new articles, to Companies House.

Issue and allotment of shares

Under the Companies Act 1985, a company must be authorised to do so. Under the 2006 Act, there is no requirement for authorisation for private companies with only one class of shares. For public companies with more than one class of shares, the 2006 Act regime is substantially the same as the 1985 Act regime.

(A) 2006 Act Companies with only one class of shares

1. Check the articles of association to see if there is any prohibition on the allotment of shares by the directors.
2. If there is no prohibition, the directors can allot shares (section 550 Companies Act 2006) without a shareholders' resolution.
3. If there is a prohibition (which is rare for private companies), the directors must pass a resolution of the shareholders (section 551 Companies Act 2006) (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares described in 3) below.

(B) 1985 Act Companies with more than one class of shares

For 1985 Act companies, the authority to allot shares must be activated by an Ordinary Resolution of the shareholders (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares).

1. Check to see whether the articles of association permit the directors to issue and allot shares.
2. If they do not, or if the articles do permit the directors to issue and allot shares but subject to a shareholders' resolution, check to see whether there is an authority to allot shares in place.

A 'section 551 authorisation' is a resolution passed by the shareholders in a general meeting, which gives the directors a general authority to allot shares up to a specified maximum and for a specified period of time.

3. If no section 551 authorisation is in place, the directors must pass such a resolution (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares). A copy of the resolution must be lodged with Companies House (See: Letter to Companies House).

Pre-emption Rights

What are pre-emption rights?
Pre-emption rights give existing shareholders the right to be offered any new shares that the company proposes to issue for sale. This means that the existence of pre-emption rights acts as a bar to the issue of new shares to new shareholders and an anti-dilution device.

Authority to issue and allot shares

Under the Companies Act 1985, a company must be authorised to allot shares if they were to be issued to shareholders of only one class of shares, of the same class. For private companies (which are not public companies), the 2006 Act regime is substantially the same as the 1985 Act regime.

2006 Act Companies with only one class of shares

Under the 2006 Act, there is no prohibition on the directors of a private company with only one class of shares to allot shares without a shareholders' resolution.

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may have the authority to issue and allot shares without a shareholders' resolution. There is no need for any further authorisation.

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may be treated as 'disapplication of section 550' companies. This means that the directors may meet and pass an ordinary resolution (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares), as described in 3) below.

1985 Act Companies with more than one class of shares and 2006 Act companies with more than one class of shares

For 1985 Act companies, the authority to allot shares must be activated by an Ordinary Resolution of the shareholders (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares).

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may permit the directors to issue and allot shares without a shareholders' resolution.

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may have the authority to issue and allot shares without a shareholders' resolution. If a shareholders' resolution is required, check to see whether there is an authority to allot shares in place.

A 'section 551 authorisation' is a resolution passed by the shareholders in a general meeting, which gives the directors a general authority to allot shares up to a specified maximum and for a specified period of time. This authority is limited to a maximum of five years.

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may permit the directors to issue and allot shares without a shareholders' resolution. If a shareholders' resolution is required, check to see whether there is an authority to allot shares in place. A copy of the resolution must be lodged with Companies House (See: Letter to Companies House).

Under the 2006 Act, private companies with only one class of shares may be treated as 'disapplication of section 550' companies. This means that the directors may meet and pass an ordinary resolution (See: Shareholders' Authority to Allot New Shares), as described in 3) below. This means that the existence of pre-emption rights acts as a bar to the issue of new shares to new shareholders.

General position under the Companies Act 2006

There is a statutory right of pre-emption under the Companies Act 2006, which means that a company cannot allot shares unless it has first offered them to each existing holder in proportion to their existing holding (the offer must be made in writing, and must remain open for 14 days).

How to disapply statutory pre-emption

A company can disapply the pre-emption rights in relation to either a specified allotment, or to allotments generally.

Pre-emption rights in relation to a specified allotment can only be disapplied by passing a special resolution of the shareholders. The directors must recommend the special resolution and must set out:

- their reasons for making the proposed allotment;
- the amount of payment to be made for the shares to be allotted; and
- the directors' justification for not offering the shares to existing shareholders in proportion to their existing holdings.

As a result of these cumbersome requirements, it is unusual for a company to disapply the pre-emption rights in relation to a specified allotment. Usually, the directors are given general authority to allot shares (the 'section 551 authority'). If the company will disapply the pre-emption rights made under that general authority, the disapplication must either:

- (i) be contained in the articles of association;
- (ii) be effected by way of a special resolution of the shareholders (See: Shareholders' Special Resolutions).

Practical procedure for issuing shares

1	Check that any issues with the company's capital, (b) directors' authority to issue shares, and (c) right to disapply pre-emption have been resolved as set out above.
2	Set up a board meeting and pass a resolution to allot shares and (ii) if relevant, to disapply pre-emption.  Record the resolution(s) in the Minutes and Directors' Resolution to Allot Shares for Cash .
3	Once funds are received by the company, the secretary must enter an allotment in the company's Register of Members (See: Register of Members ). The entry must be made within two months of the date of allotment.
4	Prepare and send out share certificates.
5	Within one month of the date of allotment, on Form SH01 (' Return of Allotment of Shares '). This must be accompanied by a Statement of Capital (which is a snapshot of the company's capital at a particular date).

Companies Act 2006, which means that a company cannot allot shares unless it has first offered them to each existing holder in proportion to their existing holding (the offer must be made in writing, and must remain open for 14 days).

A company can disapply the pre-emption rights in relation to either a specified allotment, or to allotments generally.

Pre-emption rights in relation to a specified allotment can only be disapplied by passing a special resolution of the shareholders. The directors must recommend the special resolution and must set out:

- their reasons for making the proposed allotment;
- the amount of payment to be made for the shares to be allotted; and
- the directors' justification for not offering the shares to existing shareholders in proportion to their existing holdings.

As a result of these cumbersome requirements, it is unusual for a company to disapply the pre-emption rights in relation to a specified allotment. Usually, the directors are given general authority to allot shares (the 'section 551 authority'). If the company will disapply the pre-emption rights made under that general authority, the disapplication must either:

- (i) be contained in the articles of association;
- (ii) be effected by way of a special resolution of the shareholders (See: Shareholders' Special Resolutions).

Practical procedure for issuing shares

1	Check that any issues with the company's capital, (b) directors' authority to issue shares, and (c) right to disapply pre-emption have been resolved as set out above.
2	Set up a board meeting and pass a resolution to allot shares and (ii) if relevant, to disapply pre-emption.  Record the resolution(s) in the Minutes and Directors' Resolution to Allot Shares for Cash .
3	Once funds are received by the company, the secretary must enter an allotment in the company's Register of Members (See: Register of Members ). The entry must be made within two months of the date of allotment.
4	Prepare and send out share certificates.
5	Within one month of the date of allotment, on Form SH01 (' Return of Allotment of Shares '). This must be accompanied by a Statement of Capital (which is a snapshot of the company's capital at a particular date).

	point in time – in this case, the date to which the return of allotments is made up).
--	---

Below is a flow chart that runs through these issues. Follow it through according to whether your company has new or old style articles of association to see what approvals you need to put in place.

New Articles of Association
(based on the Model Articles)

Old Articles of Association
(based on Table A)

Check the authorised share
Articles of Association
(based on Table A) capital

Use the capital

Authorised share capital is adequate

Remove the prohibition in the Memorandum of Association

NO

Do the articles prohibit the directors?

than class of re?

YES

Articles of Association
allow directors to allot shares

NO

ary ectors
res

YES

g to shares

Share Transfers

How to deal with a share transfer

In relation to shares that have been transferred from an existing shareholder, the seller (the transferor) has agreed with and the buyer (the transferee) to sell the shares to him or her. A company must register the transfer, which has been duly signed by the seller and the buyer.

Note that there may be restrictions on the transfer of shares either because of the existence of pre-emption rights (see articles see above), or because of the terms of the contract under which the seller is bound. This is not the case in this Guidance Note, which assumes the seller has a free right to dispose of the shares. At the end of this Guidance Note.

In the event of a freely transferable share, the company secretary will be required to handle the share transfer; to register the transfer and the registration paperwork.

Sale of all the shares represented by one share certificate

The following procedure applies to the sale of all the shares represented by one share certificate to the buyer:

1	The seller signs a stock transfer form (STF) and passes the form, along with the share certificate, to the buyer, who makes the payment for the shares to the seller.
2	The buyer arranges for the stamp duty to be paid, payable if the consideration for the shares is more than £1,000. A cheque for stamp duty should be made to 'HM Revenue & Customs'. See www.hmrc.gov.uk/stamps/ for more information.  If the transaction value is less than £1,000, the stock transfer form should be stamped.  The company secretary must stamp the form.
3	Once the stock transfer form is signed by the seller, the buyer should deliver the form to the company secretary.
4	On receipt, the company secretary should stamp the form by the Stamp Office. The stamp duty has been completed.  This is important, as the company secretary is personally liable for a penalty if he or she registers an improper transfer.  The company secretary must ensure the shareholding matches the Register of Members.

by the company, and are held by an individual. The company must ensure that the shareholder (the seller or transferor) has agreed with the transferee (the buyer or transferee) to sell the shares to him or her. A company must register such a transfer if an instrument of transfer (see below) has been delivered to it.

Individual to transfer his or her shares; these can be statutory or set out in the company's articles of association or the existing shareholders' agreement to this Guidance Note, which assumes there is a brief note on this subject at the end of this Guidance Note.

company secretary will be required to handle the share transfer; to register the transfer and the registration paperwork.

ing all the shares represented by one share certificate to the buyer:

Transfer (or Share Transfer) Form (STF) to the buyer, who makes the payment for the shares to the seller.
The buyer arranges for the stamp duty to be paid, payable if the consideration for the shares is more than £1,000. A cheque for stamp duty should be made to 'HM Revenue & Customs'. See www.hmrc.gov.uk/stamps/ for more information.  If the transaction value is less than £1,000, the stock transfer form should be stamped.  The company secretary must stamp the form.
Alternatively, the exemption certificate should be attached to the share certificate with the form.
at the form is properly executed and stamped by the Stamp Office. The stamp duty has been completed.  This is important, as the company secretary is personally liable for a penalty if he or she registers an improper transfer.  The company secretary must ensure the shareholding matches the Register of Members.

5	The stamped stock transfer form is then passed to the directors for consideration. If acceptable according to the articles (i.e. there are no restrictions on transfer of shares, and the directors do not wish to exercise any power of refusal), the board will resolve to pass the transfer for registration (See: Board Minutes – Approval of Share Transfer). If a seal is in use by the company, the board can simultaneously authorise the use of the seal on the share certificate.
6	The company secretary will update the Register of Members and send a share certificate out to the new member (See: Share Certificate ). This must be done within two months of the transfer being lodged with the company.
7	The stock transfer form must be kept by the company as evidence of the transfer.

Sale of part only of the shares represented by the share certificate

Where only a portion of the shares represented by one certificate are being sold, the following procedure applies:

1	The seller lodges the stock transfer form and the share certificate(s) with the company.
2	The company secretary keeps the share certificate(s), and certifies the fact of lodgement on the margin of the transfer form, which is then returned to the seller.
3	The seller delivers the transfer form to the buyer and receives the consideration for the shares. The buyer will arrange to pay the stamp duty, and get the form stamped by the Stamp Office (if applicable, see Step 2 above). He or she will then submit the duly stamped stock transfer form with the company secretary for registration.
4	The company secretary will put the proposed share transfer to the Board of directors (see Step 5 above).
5	After completing the registration and updating the Register of Members, the company secretary will send out two new certificates, one to the seller for the shares retained, and the second one to the buyer for the shares transferred.

Transmission of Shares (on death or bankruptcy)

When a shareholder dies or becomes bankrupt, his or her shares will vest with his personal representatives or his trustee in bankruptcy. Such representatives will have the right to take the shares into their own name, or to transfer them.

The company secretary must confirm the representative's right to the shares. This can be done by checking on the probate, letters of administration, certificate of appointment (or whatever document gives the representative his authority), to ensure that the person presenting themselves as the shareholder's representative is duly appointed as such. The representative will also need to produce the share certificate.

The company secretary should hold the shares in a representative capacity on the company's behalf. What this means is that, once it has been confirmed (see previous section) that the shareholder named on the share certificate is the owner of the shares.

Joint shareholders

If a joint shareholder dies, the company secretary should be notified and then update the Register of Members.

Shareholders' agreement

A shareholders' agreement is a contract between the shareholders (in contrast to the articles of association, which is a contract between the shareholders of a company and the company itself).

A shareholders' agreement is a contract between the shareholders of a company with each other and often in relation to the company. It should one shareholder wishes to sell their shares, should one shareholder wish to sell their shares from muscling in on the company as a proportion of the company's shares.

If a shareholders' agreement is entered into, the shareholders must agree to be bound by it. This can be achieved by a Deed of Adherence.

This subject is beyond the scope of this document. However, the Simply-docs documents include related documents, which include a Deed of Adherence, and also a Deed of Adherence.

(See: Shareholder Agreement - Complementary Documents)

shares are held in a representative capacity on the company's behalf. The company secretary should not accept any notice of trust. The company secretary should treat the shares as representative has been confirmed (see previous section) that the company secretary can treat the shares as if they were the absolute owner of the shares.

If a joint shareholder dies, the company secretary should be notified and then update the Register of Members.

Shareholders' rights

A shareholders' agreement is a contract between the shareholders (in contrast to the articles of association, which is a contract between the shareholders of a company and the company itself).

A shareholders' agreement is a contract between the shareholders of a company with each other and often in relation to the company. It should one shareholder wishes to sell their shares, should one shareholder wish to sell their shares from muscling in on the company as a proportion of the company's shares.

If a shareholders' agreement is entered into, the shareholders must agree to be bound by it. This can be achieved by a Deed of Adherence.

This subject is beyond the scope of this document. However, the Simply-docs documents include related documents, which include a Deed of Adherence, and also a Deed of Adherence.

(See: Shareholder Agreement - Complementary Documents)